

ABSTRACT

Mia Agustina, COMMUNITY PARTICIPATION IN WASTE MANAGEMENT (Case Study : Mount Gede Pangrango National Park - West Java). Bachelor theses. Jakarta: majoring in Education Social Science Faculty of Social Sciences University of Jakarta, 2016.

This research aims to provide information on how the community participation in the vicinity of Mount Gede Pangrango National Park in manage waste the results of ascent as well as visitors who come. Understanding in the sense that others this research explained how the process of community participation around in the management of waste is produced from the ascent of and visitors to the national park. Collected data examined the authenticity using the technique of extension observation, triangulation, referential adequacy and auditing with a thesis advisor. In the field research carried out during the month of December 2015 until May 2016.

This research uses qualitative descriptive approach in order to get a deep data with mendeskripsi research results from the author of informers research. The source of the data obtained is using the results of the interview, observation and study of the library, data that has been collected for the author to do data processing.

The results of the study concludes that the participation of the surrounding communities in waste management by the results of the ascent of the First, the public held kerjabakti every week, in order to reduce the accumulation of waste. Second, operating activities clean mountains held by the organization that rewarding Jewish participants joined the event made the passion for people to join the activity . Third, existing barriers arising from related parties such as the National Parks that minimize the expenditure for the dustbin, society and the merchants who do not pay dues.

Key Words : Community Participation, garbage management.